The study of income inequalities in health has increased in the last few years, both because they have been shown to be associated to several conditions related to health status, and because their determination is a very important public health problem. This literature shows that income inequalities are associated to health inequalities, as the relationship between both variables seems to be rather complex. In the literature, some explanations are explained, among others: income inequalities can lead to inequalities in health, as resources are not distributed equitably; health conditions can also create inequality, as they affect the use of resources. Income inequalities are related to health inequalities because the different distribution in income generates inequitable access to economic opportunities, and this inequitable access is directly related to the unequal distribution of health resources. This paper analyzes the strength of this relationship, using various approaches, evaluating the bias and generalization power of this relationship. The results of this study indicate that inequitable income inequalities are related to health inequalities, and this relationship can be applied to a wide set of health problems.Q: What's the difference between an eigenvector and an eigenfunction? I've been using them interchangeably to mean the same thing. But I'm pretty sure that they're not the same thing, that there's some subtle difference between the two. Why is there a subtle difference? Are both related to a linearized version of the governing equations? A: The eigenfunction is a function that spans the entire domain space. An eigenvector is one for which the eigenspace is one dimensional. But for a linear system, the solutions span the domain space, so both are the same. For

Removable Media Recorder is a tool that makes recording the history of your computer data simple and easy. It acts as a virtual "time machine", helping you recover files in case they are lost for some reason. You are able to record your activities using a graphic interface (graphical timeline), which allows you to easily select any period of time you want to recover. You can record either a single folder or the entire partition on your hard drive. The program works as a virtual drive that can be started and stopped by using the options provided by Windows. It is compatible with Windows 7, Windows 8, Windows 10 and Windows Server 2008 R2 and 2012. Recorder's Folder The recorder contains a virtual, user-created folder into which data is stored. The folder can be renamed and moved to a different location. The recording can be stored on the local drive or any cloud storage service (e.g. Google Drive, Dropbox). Depending on the account you have there, you will be able to select which files are recorded and their location. If you use a cloud service that records the files for you, the documents you record will be saved to that service and will be available offline. These data can be saved on a local drive as well. All recorded folders are ordered from oldest to newest, and you can order them by name, time or date. Folders recorded earlier are copied to a cache folder so you can access them later even if the original folder is deleted (this is not needed for Windows local drives) and they are accessible from any computer. You can create different folders for different recordings (e.g. "Projects" folder for the recording of your daily work). You can easily select the partition that contains the folder to record (e.g. C: or D:). Key features: Recorder is available on Windows 7, 8, 10 and Server 2012. Recording can be started and stopped using the Start and End buttons. You are able to select the folder that will be recorded and also the partition on which you want to perform the recording (C: or D:). As the folder is saved to the cloud, it is always accessible offline. You can save the folder to a different partition (e.g. "My Documents" partition) or name it. You can duplicate the folder by moving it to a different location. You can also select which documents will be stored and their storage location
