Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a liquid crystal device suitable for use in display devices, and to a method for producing the same. 2. Description of the Related Art Display devices using a liquid crystal panel are widely used as display devices for various types of equipment such as a portable television and a laptop computer. A liquid crystal panel is produced by bonding two substrates, and such a liquid crystal panel is produced by a method of producing a liquid crystal panel including bonding two substrates and an encapsulating step. The encapsulating step is a step for sealing at least the two substrates together with a sealant or a resin (hereinafter referred to as an encapsulating material) in a state where a liquid crystal is filled in the gap between the two substrates. The encapsulating step is mainly performed in a state where a liquid crystal panel is heated and softened. Among a variety of methods for producing a liquid crystal panel including an encapsulating step, various methods have been proposed in terms of the light transmittance of a liquid crystal panel. Specifically, as shown in FIG. 10A, there is a method in which a sealant 10' of a light transmissive resin is applied to a liquid crystal panel 10 in a state where the liquid crystal panel 10 is heated and softened. Then, as shown in FIG. 10B, the pressure of air is applied to the liquid crystal panel 10 to harden the sealant 10', thereby encapsulating the liquid crystal panel 10. The method for encapsulating a liquid crystal panel using a light transmissive resin as a sealant can be performed without developing variations in the light transmittance of the liquid crystal panel. Thus, it is required to have a smaller light transmittance of a sealant 10' in order to achieve a method for producing a liquid crystal panel with an excellent light transmittance. In order to reduce the light transmittance of a sealant, a method for causing a resin applied to a liquid crystal panel to flow into the gap between the two substrates after it is applied to the liquid crystal panel is proposed (JP 4648438 B). However, in this method, although the amount of the resin flowing into the gap can be controlled, a problem arises in that variations in the degree of a resin flowing into the gap tend to occur. Another method for encapsulating
