Choose from five different jumpers and try to stay in the air as long as you can. The jumps are quite simple, your characters will jump a few yards, then instantly fall. Also, at the highest point of their jump your score will be measured, the higher it is, the more... Get Book an Ice Cream Trusted by millions App-Vault is what App-V is all about. If there is a Windows Update you want to deploy, we can do that and much more through App-V. Let's take an example of using .NET Framework 4.5.2 and SQL Server. With App-V we can deploy the .NET Framework, install SQL Server, activate and configure them at the same time (integrate the features with each other). You can also make use of Group Policy to apply App-V policies to devices. This allows you to have a centrally managed deployment. App-V is all about protecting your enterprise apps. In App-V this is done by deploying the apps in the same manner as MSDN and other download providers. If I want to download Microsoft Office, I don't go to a website and download the MSI file, I use a client that installs from a single location. And with App-V, you can deploy your apps in the same manner. If you're a MSI developer, you'll be happy to know that you can deploy your apps directly to a device through an App-V package. In fact, most of the MSDN deployment methods you'll be familiar with. If I want to develop and test my .NET 4.5.2 apps, I can do that. If I want to add a feature for my enterprise apps to work with Azure services, I can do that. If I want to make use of existing enterprise apps that are deployed in production, I can do that. We have a lot of different ways to make App-V work for you. Why choose App-V? Protection App-V enables you to use either content-based policies or module-based policies
