

I understand that Microsoft is just trying to keep its product keys secure, but it's honestly a bit ridiculous. If every time I ... Well, first of all, it's a little ridiculous. If every time I access the support page (like in a browser) I want to have a product key for that particular Windows user account, that sounds like a really bad idea, unless you want to have a copy of the product key available to all your Windows user accounts. Secondly, it can get pretty weird. For example:
