VisualStart With License Code

1. You create a new project in a new folder, giving it a name, selected the type of template you wish to use, and clicked on "Next". 2. VisualStart will now check to see if a folder with the same name already exists and add it to the list of folders stored as templates. 3. You can now browse through your templates and choose a template you wish to use. Then click next 4. To start using the project you've just created you can either start it from the VisualStart "New Project Wizard" or you can directly start it by double clicking the file. As always, VisualStart has made a lot of extra settings available to you so that you can have as much power over the template as you want. NOTE : You must have Visual Studio 8 or Visual Studio 2010 installed as part of this app to work. WHAT'S NEW: - T4Script templates are now used by default - this gives you the flexibility to use other types of templates if you wish This is a new release of the T4 Script templates available as part of Visual Studio 2010. VS2010 T4SCRIPT Templates Important: If you are using a T4SCRIPT project template, please refer to the VS2010 T4SCRIPT documentation on CodePlex to check if a new version is available for this template. Enables you to write T4 Script for Visual Studio projects. You can use this template to create custom T4 services, to implement a new feature or to add support for new languages into your Visual Studio projects. Important: If you are using a T4SCRIPT project template, please refer to the VS2010 T4SCRIPT documentation on CodePlex to check if a new version is available for this template. The Reference Template VS2010 (Release 1) helps you to create a reference documentation for your C# assemblies. This template has been created as part of the World Wide Developer Conference of 2009. You can use it to create the reference documentation for your C# assemblies. This template creates reference documentation from the Microsoft Visual Studio Reference Assemblies (in the Visual Studio.NET Framework Source Code for Visual Studio.NET 2006 - current source code). This is a new release of the Reference Template available as part of Visual Studio 2010. What's New: - T4Script templates are now used by default - this gives you the flexibility to use other types of templates if you
