The man, who had bees stuck to his eyes, mouth, and nose, was taken to hospital after being stung by an estimated 130 bees on the Central line. “He was stung by one bee, then it kept circling him and then another one stung him at the same place,” a witness said. “He was really panicking. His lips were swollen.” The bees were discovered by an off-duty London Underground staff member working in the ticket booth at Waterloo Station. “He was very worried he was going to be attacked,” the witness said. They said the man was covered in bees in a compartment about half an hour from arrival at Waterloo. The witness added: “The Metropolitan police were there but were a bit confused about what to do. “Everyone was afraid.” A spokesman for London Underground said: “We’re investigating and will be taking the appropriate action.” Last year, a similar incident occurred when a man was covered in bees on the Northern Line. He was treated by the London Fire Brigade for inhalation of the venom.This invention relates to an optical pickup 82138339de
