Fortnite Greenlight Notes Fortnite launched a short beta test on PlayStation 4, Xbox One and PC and the decision has been taken to bring the game to Steam. Previous Greenlight was for the Windows 10 Store which left us with no particular choice. "Where a lot of games have choices, it's great. We're excited to give the PC community a unique experience where you're the only one that can decide where it lands," says Brendan "PlayerUnknown" Greene. With Fortnite being developed by the unknown developer, Epic Games, and the games lack of a strong brand, Fortnite has been sitting on the Greenlight page. The Fortnite Installer is no longer used and instead users are prompted to enter their Epic Games account details. So, what have people thought of Greenlight? The number of times votes have been changed has been increasing, and this is in line with the trend we saw in the past with a lot of games. At this point in time, the website still seems to be getting a good response from players. The change has been seen as a positive move, and with the game being added to Steam Greenlight will hopefully increase the exposure of the game. The game is due for release on 27 October. Thanks, Files. Mycobacterium tuberculosis (Mtb) infects ~9.6 million people worldwide and the resultant disease (TB) kills ~1.5 million people each year. While it is possible that TB vaccines could provide protection from recurrent disease, insufficient efficacy of the current generation of vaccines proves that, in order to develop better vaccines, the contribution of innate and adaptive immune responses to Mtb control must be elucidated. Elucidating the interactions of Mtb with the
