All that glows in the dark through the black layer of mineral deposits and sediments that have accumulated in the water is now secreted phosphorescence, a phenomenon that's often called spooky glowing. Phosphorescence is the emission of a re-radiated and re-emitted (reflected and refracted) ultraviolet (UV) and visible light that occurs in alkaline solutions at low concentrations of dissolved minerals. Phosphorescence is caused by the action of certain oxidizing impurities (e.g., dissolved inorganic phosphate, dissolved organic matter, and uranium compounds) on trivalent chromium ($Cr3+$) in the water, which results in the conversion of the trivalent chromium to the relatively stable hexavalent chromium ($Cr6+$). Only when these compounds react with the $Cr3+$ will the energy and wavelength of the UV light converted to visible light in the visible light spectrum. b7e8fdf5c8
