Artas SAM 6.1 License Key Offline Installer Offline.Depression of serotonin (5-HT) function has been linked to depression, obsessive compulsive disorder, and other mood and anxiety disorders. The loss of 5-HT function is thought to be due to over-stimulation of the 5-HT-1A receptor (5-HT1AR) by 5-HT. We recently developed a novel selective 5-HT1AR antagonist, WAY-100635 (WAY), that prevents a loss of 5-HT function when given to conscious mice. Remarkably, WAY does not cross the blood brain barrier (BBB) in the intact mouse. We have been able to devise a novel brain delivery system (Lenti-DREADD) that enables use of this drug in intact animals and study its mechanisms of action in vivo. The proposed experiments will test a model of 5-HT1AR-induced anxiogenic responses in mice and test how WAY prevents these responses. Other experiments will examine the mechanism of action of WAY. We will test whether WAY works by facilitating the presynaptic release of 5-HT using selectively inhibiting the 5-HT transporter (SERT) or inhibiting the 5-HT metabolizing enzyme monoamine oxidase A (MAO-A). We will test whether WAY works by blocking presynaptic or postsynaptic 5-HT1AR function. We will also test whether WAY works by preventing 5-HT1AR-mediated changes in an inhibitor of phosphodiesterases (PDE) that increases cyclic AMP (cAMP) and/or by increasing levels of the inhibitory neurotransmitter GABA. Experiments will test whether WAY works by blocking 5-HT1AR- mediated changes in levels of extracellular signal-related kinase (ERK), an important intracellular signal for 5-HT1AR function. These experiments will provide novel insights into the effects of selective 5-HT1AR antagonists on mood and anxiety-like behavior. Results will have a large impact on drug discovery for the treatment of mental illnesses such as depression and anxiety. PUBLIC HEALTH RELEVANCE: Mood and anxiety disorders are very prevalent in society and consume a large amount of health care resources. Our proposal studies a novel drug that has a high affinity for the 5-HT1A receptor. We will study
