Edwina Currie expects the Tories to win the General Election and is not concerned that the former Chancellor Nigel Lawson is backing the Labour Party. 'I have no problem with him backing Labour,' she said. 'He should vote for the party he likes.' However, Mrs Currie said her friend was not a 'fool' and did not expect Mr Lawson to back 'half-baked policies'. Scroll down for video

Edwina Currie, pictured in 1992, is backing Tory candidate Dr Owen Paterson Mrs Currie said Mr Lawson could 'do no wrong' in her eyes. She told the Mail: 'I don't see how you can be a fool to back any party and not have good intentions. 'I don't think he's doing this for any good reason – just because he feels he wants to be the head of a party and join it. I've known him since he was at Cambridge. He's not a fool. 'He's the same old Nigel, a grand old boy. I have no problem with him.' Asked about Mr Lawson's backing of the Labour Party, Mrs Currie said: 'I have no problem with it at all. Nigel is a friend of mine and if he thinks Labour have good policies, I don't think he's a fool to support them. I'm a Labour supporter. 'But I'm sure he'll vote for the party he likes and isn't just trying to get into office. 'I don't think he's ever considered half-baked policies. I think he just wants to be a party leader.' Her comments come after Mr Lawson, 63, backed Mrs Currie's Conservative candidate, Dr Owen Paterson, in a letter written in support of the Tory candidate. In the missive sent to the Daily Telegraph, Mr Lawson said: 'I have known Edwina Currie for over 40 years. I had the pleasure of working with her firstly as a journalist and

System Requirements:

Windows: Macintosh: Linux: Xbox 360 The difficult decisions that are your only option for taking a trip are exciting, and this game, which I've played through, has some interesting elements. I do think that even if the game has a few kinks in the road, there is a lot of potential here, and a lot of gamers will enjoy a game that does justice to the strangeness of a pirate loner traveling to the depths of the world to seek his fortune.
