It is located at an altitude of on the Aosta Valley (Ligurian Alps) and the Po Plain, at the heart of the Upper Aosta Valley. The old town is located on a steep hill surrounded by a medieval wall. History The city was founded in the 12th century by Saint Savino and developed by the Counts of Aosta; a castle was constructed on the site in the 15th century. The city was destroyed several times by the Duchy of Savoy during the Italian Wars. San Donato was destroyed, along with most of Aosta, in 1686 during the Great French Invasion of Italy. This was a disastrous defeat for the Milanese, who lost nearly half of their territory. In 1689 an army of Savoyards rebuilt the town, a process which finished in 1704. During the Second World War, the city was heavily damaged by bombing in April 1944. Main sights The city walls were built in the 12th century; following the destruction of San Donato in 1686, the city was rebuilt in baroque style, with a huge piazza, town hall and a church. The piazza is covered by a vast painted wooden roof, on which is located a gigantic and odd statue of Saint Savino. In the 16th-century, the town hall had a huge frescoed hall, now absent; other parts of the building still show the imposing style of the residence of the Counts of Aosta. The church of Sant'Elia is the most famous architectural monument of the city. Its architectural style, in the late-baroque, is noteworthy. This church has been listed as a UNESCO World Heritage Site since 1987. Transportation San Donato is connected by road to Turin, Italy, and via the A
