Advances in tracheotomy for individuals with cystic fibrosis (CF) have demonstrated a decrease in morbidity and mortality in patients with the disease. These advances have also presented issues with performing tracheotomies. Outcomes have been suggested to be similar among patients with CF as compared with other causes of respiratory failure. The objective of this study was to determine the impact of tracheotomy on the quality of life (QoL) of patients with CF. This study was a cross-sectional survey. It evaluated the impact of CF on QoL. Patients were recruited from the CF clinic of a single tertiary care center. A convenience sample of 50 patients with CF was enrolled. Patients completed surveys to measure QoL and depression. They also answered questions about CF and the tracheotomy procedure. QoL and depression scores were generated by the Quality of Life Questionnaire-Short Form (QOL-V2.0) and the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI), respectively. This instrument utilizes a standard scoring system and has been used in other studies evaluating QoL. A significant difference was noted between patients who had undergone a tracheotomy and those who had not ($p = 0.003$). Subgroup analysis revealed that patients with CF and b7e8fdf5c8
