License: Shareware, $19.00 to buy time online. Publisher's Description: The Designer Clock is an adware/spyware which causes many problems. At the same time, it's also packed with a huge variety of eye-candy features. If you happen to have an otherwise working Windows, the Designer Clock will make sure that every cent added to your account will go into it, and then some. In most cases, all that's left for you is to choose the product to be offered to your friends. The only thing is that it's not that easy to do, but if you happen to be the lucky one with the most intelligent friends on the planet, you may be lucky enough to do it. The quality of the software is certainly quite bad, considering the easy, and almost obligatory, way it gets in there. But to be fair, it's actually a little better than other software in this sphere. The main reason to have it installed is the ability to make decisions on your part. For example, you may want to force it to show the second time, or the minute time on the clock. You can even have the gadget to play music. It's even possible to have the Designer Clock to show a friendly message to your friends every now and then. And if that's not enough, you can always make it show pretty much anything you want. In other words, the Designer Clock has the power to do just about anything, and then some. The percentage of the problems the designer clock might cause to your computer isn't in the real range of probability. If you have a working Windows, or are willing to get a working one, you'll most likely be okay. The only thing is that the designer clock will most likely make your online activity even more suspicious. The spyware is quite prolific in its variety, and it comes with a variety of buttons and links. Some of them are good, and some of them are not. But as long as you click on something you'll most likely end up in some questionable pages. Advertising is practically inevitable with this tool, but the number of times that this happens are highly disproportionate to how often it happens. You don't even need to look for it. It's hard to believe that a website has really useful information that doesn't involve advertising b7e8fdf5c8

Designer Clock, initially released as free freeware, was the first widget of its kind, and was compared to the likes of Windows Desktop Gadgets. This is a simple time tracker, which can be set to emit the current time once a timer expires, or if mouse interaction is detected.
