The fantasy action RPG 'Elden Ring' expands the world of the 'Elden Ring - The Wings of Honor' MMO by introducing completely new combat elements, massive battles with hordes of enemies, and an all new story. The world of this RPG has a detailed map with beautiful 3D graphics. The game story is very predictable and didn't really leave me too thrilled. For a fantasy RPG, the world is generic, the story is a bit thin, the combat is generic and I hope there are better RPGs like my suggestion. Oh, and the music is just downright awful. There's nothing in this game I like and the gameplay is not too appealing to me. It reminds me of Rome Total War. The combat system in this game is like a 5th iteration of Rome, like around Rome 2.5 and whatever. The combat seems to be very limited. You have a 5 hit combo. It's very linear and cannot be unlocked later in the game. There's only 2 character customization options, and it takes a very long time to unlock/unlock it. The only thing you can change is the statistics of your "hero". The combat seems to be quite repetitive. You have to charge a skill by clicking on it and it will attack the enemy, and it repeats for the whole combat. In one of my first combat, I played as a vampire, and I wasn't able to use a single vampire skill. (The vampire class didn't have a single skill to learn.) In some story missions, you'll be given a charge attack that will clean out everything and will also make you attack on anything around you. That seems extremely oppressive and doesn't seem fun to me at all. Another big thing that I don't like is the number of enemies in this game. It can get really boring sometimes. It's good that you can fight horde of enemies, but there's an obvious limit. Besides, the enemy in this game has no reactions to the attacks. It's just like a dummy. Maybe it's the type of enemy that makes it seem that way, but I don't like it. The inventory system is not that good. You have to check your skills and items all the time and when you are using them in combat. Some items can only be used when you are in combat. Some enemies will only let you use a certain item. So, you'll have to allocate your 3 inventory slots with your skills and items. Oh,

When I first heard about this game, I was intrigued by the game's story and class system. The game was able to convey a message in a light way, using this compelling narrative, as well as a light character design. Some of the characters have become some of my favorites from the story, such as the Mage, Priestess, and Warrior. After I decided to buy the game, I was very curious to see how the game would play. I am glad to say that the game turned out really well, and it was extremely interesting. At first, I was worried about the combat system. In this game, you have a selection of four weapons, but you can actually bring up to four weapon types in one battle. It is important to know that each weapon has its own offense and defense properties, and it is important to know the attack and defense properties of each weapon to choose the appropriate weapon depending on the enemy. When I first began the game, I didn't know what to choose as my weapon type. I wasn't sure what to pick, because it's easy to get hit with your own weapons. I was concerned that it wouldn't matter what type of weapon I was using, because the other character types could attack with a different weapon type. The other class type that I was worried about was the Mage class. In this game, you start with just a shield, but you have the ability to grow your weapon. The Mage class has a variety of spells that can be used during battle. I was also worried that while I was using my attack abilities, the Mage class would gain an advantage from their magical abilities. When the game begins, you will be able to create your character, and I would suggest creating a Ranger
