“Tarnished World” is the first-ever game that integrates the combat genre with the classic RPG genre to create a dramatic, rich narrative. I’m a fan of the old fantasy RPG genre, but the genre has changed a lot since I was a teenager, and this was definitely a surprise for me. I expected an action game, but the elements of an RPG, such as character development, quests, and statistics, were also present in it. Players start out as a young and unknown kid who struggles with his first steps in life, and receive a huge amount of items in the form of usable weapons and other items. Players can freely choose what type of weapons and item to equip from the start, although a random chance may occur for some items. There is a time limit when it comes to using items, so players must think before they use items to equip. On the first day of your life, you will go to the top of a mountain to receive a gift from a mysterious girl who calls herself the Mistress. This is the starting point of your character’s life, and the fact that you are born by a miracle means that your character has special powers. When you talk to your Mistress, she will ask you to travel to the lands of darkness in the moon called the Netherworld, and play a role in an already in progress drama. This is where the first quest in the game will be located. Although I didn’t expect an RPG at first, the plot of the game and the overall impression of the game made me feel as if it was a classic RPG. After completing the first quest, a very important role begins. You will be guided to many interesting NPCs, and reach the new world that feels more thrilling than any other game out there. When you first leave the time limit to use items, your character will no longer be able to use items. You will be able to use items, as long as you take the time to train them. The development of your character will also be affected by your performance of individual roles. The gameplay is mainly RPG-like, and it is possible to increase your character’s power while traveling from one quest to the next through dungeons. You will be able to use two-handed weapons and magic, both of which vary depending on the difficulty level of the dungeon. Dungeons have a three-dimensional shape and design, and for some dungeons, you will be able to walk into the bff6bb2d33
