The fighting in this game is such that even if you see the enemy, there is no indicator on the screen. You must consciously discern the location of the enemy is thinking about two things: attacking you and thinking about attacking you. If there is no hint of what the enemy is thinking, try to gauge the enemy's movements by looking at their attacks. ▼ What the enemy is feeling Gaining a technique by leveling up can be a powerful experience for players. However, a technique will determine the attacks that the enemy will perform, so it is a factor in the fight. ▼ Reaction to your attacks There are several things that will become known to you, including the reactions of your enemies, when your attacks are used. If a reaction occurs, that will increase the effect of your attacks. ▼ Evasion The enemy has an evasive element that will respond to attacks and will become known to you, and the more frequently the enemy seems evasive, the faster you will become known as evasive. ▼ Counterattack If you sense that the enemy has a technique that cannot be blocked, you will not know if you will counterattack until you enter a situation where you will counterattack. ▼ Changes in status The status of the enemy can change through status conditions that are not always obvious. If these conditions change, their status will change. The status of the enemy is represented by a star on the top right of the screen. ▼ Battles in Dungeons In dungeons where the rooms all link to one another, you will often meet enemies that will not be able to tell which room you are in. If you attack enemies wille you are in those rooms, they will be pushed back. This will continue until you defeat them. You will even encounter the boss of the dungeon and the reduce of a dungeon after your character has awakened, the battles will start from the location where you awakened. If you leave the dungeon and then immediately return, the battles will start from the dungeon and then return after a while, the battle will start from where you entered

If you've played Left 4 Dead, pay attention: its perfectly modeled a lot of aspects of actual nighttime SWAT and anti-terrorist work. Of course, the monsters are not practical opponents like zombies and acid con mary's kids. So, it's an urban spinoff. People who want to play L4D without zombies will be fine with this game. Its also perfect for people who want the job of keeping a city safe.
