I have used

Microsoft Project for many years, but just a few months ago I decided to try the free CRM4Fun version. It has been such a pleasure to use it, that I started developing an export / import tool for Excel; from a MS Project 2008 file. I have used the CRM4Fun program for some time now. It works perfectly and the licenses are not expensive. They have also helped me several times when I was working with a large number of files. They were also a good team to assist me during this project. Good software, but the licenses are insanely

The rat cerebellum is commonly used for electrophysiological studies, as many of the basic mechanisms of the central nervous system are first observed in this region. However, the potential use of the cerebellum as a biosensor is far more limited. This study reveals a simple method that is effective in producing a viable, chemically responsive tissue in the cerebellum. This technique has been used to develop a new kind of electrical biosensor for measuring changes in electrical conductivity occurring during chemical exposure. The derivation of the new devices relies on the avoidance of denaturing or destructive electrolysis effects with the use of in vivo electroporation, electroporation, direct electroporation, and direct stimulation. Electrodes were implanted in the cerebellum, and recordings were performed via a recording apparatus. The electrical response to drug exposure could be observed within minutes of the application of analytes, and the response persisted for at least 7 days in vitro. The electrical response was observed in the Purkinje cell layers for all analytes tested. These devices were further characterized by measuring sensor response in vitro to a variety of agents, including the neurotransmitters glutamate and GABA./* * Copyright 2019 Google LLC.
