The feature will be exclusive to players who pre-order Fifa 22 Serial Key, and will be available for any player to use at any time once released. Head of Marketing, Consumer Products and Digital, Marta Garcia told CBTv that FIFA's players and staff had voiced a desire for more authentic sporting data and experience. "We've played with our data in the past but never like this, so we knew that it had to be better than what we've done in the past." "We know that players love our FUT series and we want them to play in the most authentic way possible, with the most authentic players." She added that FIFA 22 would also see an increase in the number of licenses, with Adidas having provided the most licenses to date (62) and the London 2012 Olympics being an example of an event FIFA's players were interested in using. Garcia went on to say that FIFA is working on a mixture of high-level and grassroots licenses to match the EA SPORTS Football Club game, as well as an API "so that you can have a full suite of, not just retail, but retail with an API." FIFA's players had previously voiced their concerns regarding the authenticity of in-game features, with Garcia highlighting a range of issues, including playing with an artificial player model or face. "To make the game we actually want to make it and not what the player wants...the player doesn't want to play with an artificial player, they want to play with the real player. When they're playing in matches they want to be inspired by the real players." FIFA 22 launches on the PC, Playstation 4 and Xbox One on 26 August, with EA SPORTS Football Club coming to release on 23 November.
