HyperMotion Technology replaces basic animations with an array of animations tailored to a specific play action, and adopts different animation sets according to the type of play. Dynamic camera angles adjust in real time to the motion of the player as the camera follows them around the field or zooms in to observe the results of their actions. Players receive feedback as to whether or not their actions were successful or not and can quickly identify what needs to be improved. In-game action recreations are more intense than ever before. For the first time in FIFA, players can see real-world animations and real-world collisions through Player Impact Visuals (PIVs), which allows real-world player behavior to be translated directly into the virtual environment. Players are able to receive hard hits and can react to blocked shots and collisions within the play engine using PIVs. "There are some games that provide a beautiful game engine, but it doesn't really matter because the visuals are probably not as realistic as they could be. However, FIFA has historically had a fantastic engine that we can further improve upon, and the goal for FIFA 21 was to be the best-looking game on the market," explained Producer Xavier Leggeduze. "HyperMotion Technology compliments that engine, allowing us to make FIFA the best-looking football game in the world. We are incredibly excited that fans will now have access to a completely new way of gaming with the next-generation FIFA." FIFA 22 will feature two new online content items. The first is the Online Pass, which can be purchased separately or together with the standard game disc. Online Pass content includes two online leagues, a new Global Pass featuring more than 40 leagues from across the world, an online friend's network and official FIFA Social platforms. Each Online Pass component, including gameplay improvements, provides players with the opportunity to try online modes they may never have experienced before, such as in-depth tactics and new player actions that are not already available in-game. Another exciting online content item is the Journey Kit, which will allow players to connect to the game online to create and play custom leagues. Players will be able to play in custom leagues tailored to their style of play, utilising licensed player kits and stadiums and creating their own custom kits and stadiums. Through this Journey Kit feature, players will be able to connect with fans from around the world, creating a truly global experience. "We created the Journey Kit to remove the
