FileMaker Pro Advanced 12.0.2.105 is FileMaker's flagship platform.Q: When is it a good idea to use HTML TableLayoutPanel vs VERTICAL Panel? I work in VS2010/WPF and I have VERTICAL Panel filled with rows. Each row consists of a checkbox, a textbox and a label. I use TableLayoutPanel (for the "checkbox" and "textbox") and Grid (for the "label") (because labels are beside each other as we do with the textbox-textbox spacing). I notice that I have about 5 rows of this panel (textbox, textbox, label, label, label, checkbox, checkbox, checkbox, label, label, label, textbox). I was wondering whether it would be more logical to have only one row of the panel and instead having one main row and have the "checkbox" and "textbox" per row. So the panel would consist of labels and only one row per panel would be mandatory. When would it be better to have panel having this layout vs having panel having the first one? A: I personally like having one row per panel. Even if I have a grid inside of it and I change the row height to auto, it looks good to me. I do not like having two rows stacked vertically and it is very jarring to the eye when things start looking jumbled. In my opinion, you should use whichever is more familiar to your users. A: The title of the panel (for those who don't know) in the TableLayoutPanel is "[name of the control] in the [row number of the panel]"; so, yes, it's the label. It would be better to use a Grid containing one row with two columns. Using TableLayoutPanel takes more steps to create than using a Grid. However, you're likely to have to learn a new style, so it's a question of tradeoffs. Amanda Brown Today, after a jury in the state of Florida found a girl guilty of aggravated battery with a deadly weapon for stabbing her school principal, school Superintendent Charles Turner declared the school "safer." However, this was despite the fact that Turner's own daughter (the student's sister) had been assaulted on the school bus by another student in a knife attack that same year. As the Miami Herald
