Among these are infection (e.g. tuberculosis), low potassium levels that can cause chest tightness, difficulty breathing, nausea or vomiting, and long term high potassium that can cause muscle tremors, trembling, fainting, seizures, and other problems. Usually these problems occur when potassium levels in the blood reach or exceed 5.5 mmol/L, or are usually reversed when potassium levels drop below 5 mmol/L. Acetaminophen (e.g. Tylenol®) is a nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drug (NSAID). A medicine that acts in the same way to help to reduce pain or fever or to reduce inflammation. Acid reflux may be one of the symptoms of peptic ulcer disease, a disease of the stomach or the oesophagus that can affect people of all ages and people who are overweight or obese. Acid reflux may be one of the symptoms of gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD), a condition in which backflow of stomach contents into the esophagus occurs. People with this condition have frequent or persistent symptoms of heartburn, chest pain, regurgitation of food, or a bitter or sour taste in the mouth. The basic clinical approach to acid reflux disease and GERD is a stepwise algorithm in which, in a patient with heartburn, anti-reflux treatment is initiated, with the goal of relieving the symptoms completely and determining whether the patient requires additional treatment, including medications or surgery. 8-hyd

After the transfer to the Municipal Health District (DMS) in the city of Guayaguil, this study aimed to identify the factors that impacted on continuity of the system, as well as to evaluate the degree of compliance with rules and norms of the profession in this health district. A descriptive and cross-sectional study was carried out in two outpatient centers and the central hospital of the Municipal Health District of Guayaguil, between May and July 2004. The data were collected in face-to-face interviews with a non-probabilistic sampling for a sample of 107 health professionals. A descriptive analysis was done, using a 5-grade Likert scale (1 = not at all,to 5 = totally) to measure compliance with the rules and norms of the medical profession. A bivariate analysis was performed using Pearson chisquare and the Mann-Whitney test for the qualitative variables and the Spearman correlation for the quantitative ones. The degree of professional engagement was higher than that of responsibility (4.5 vs. 3.9), professional discipline (2.3 vs. 2.2), and relation with the user (3.5 vs. 3.4). The rules and norms were completely respected only in general medicine, and they were violated by public health professionals in community medicine (p = 0.05). The continuity of the system was not possible. This was attributable mainly to the low compliance with rules and norms of the profession.Q: How to run Spark job manually? I have an AWS EC2, and I want to run some Spark jobs. I got the SparkConf,

SparkContext, DataFrame, and Dataset, but I don't know how to get all the functions in the code and run them to achieve the result. Also, I have some questions like: How many Functions does Spark have? How to get all the functions in the code? A: Spark supports automatic methods of "launching" applications: SparkContext.textFile() for reading files
