Komentari 1, 2013Â .[Headache associated with spinal cord compression: toward a neuronavigation based intraspinal blockade]. Headache in the context of a spinal cord compression syndrome is common and remains an important symptom that must be carefully distinguished from associated neurologic deficits. The differential diagnosis between benign (eg. compressive cervical myelitis, posterior fossa tumor, vertebral artery aneurysm) versus malignant (eg. metastasis) etiology must be considered before making a decision on treatment. The latter can only be undertaken when a quality of life prognosis has been obtained. The paper presents a case of a 42-year-old woman suffering from a cervical myelopathy caused by a pituitary mass. Headaches occurred at the beginning of the disease, were severe, lasted 6 hours a day without any response to paracetamol or caffeine and associated with hypoesthesia. A computed tomography scan showed a transverse process compressing the spinal cord. The patient underwent a cervicothoracic
