The Samsung Infuse 4G Slide Review.Mechanism of plasma lipoprotein assembly and metabolism in absence of apolipoprotein E. The high and very high density lipoproteins (VHDL and HDL) in humans contain virtually all of the cholesterol transported to the target tissue. Thus, their assembly is intimately connected with the lipid metabolism of the liver. Although considerable progress has been made in delineating the structure and metabolism of the low density lipoproteins (LDL) and the role of LDL receptors, more knowledge is required to understand the unique features of HDL. Lack of HDL biosynthesis and abnormal metabolism are associated with dyslipidemia, coronary artery disease, and other cardiovascular diseases. The lipid composition of HDL depends on both the hepatic and extrahepatic synthesis of VHDL as well as the clearance of the LDL remnant particles. Completion of the biosynthetic cycle of the VHDL apolipoprotein A-I (apoA-I) and transport of cholesteryl esters from the cell surface of the liver to the Golgi apparatus is the initial step in the formation of HDL. HDL is directly cleared from the circulation via the LDL receptor-dependent pathway. In the absence of apoE, VHD
