I am using Microsoft Access and I have a form which contains a few Text Boxes and Drop Down List items. I am running in to an issue where I created a record without assigning a value to a field. When I go to view the record I still see the value that I assigned during the record creation process. It's very annoying. Is there a setting that needs to be enabled for this to work? A: Are you sure you were inserting a record into the table (no default values)? Maybe you could ask the question in the access forum: When you first meet someone you meet someone who has one foot in the past and one foot in the future. The present is the place where you are, but even so you have a past, and a future. You are living in the middle.

Sometimes life can feel like that. Sometimes you feel like you are in the middle between past and future. If you have kids, the future that is so easy to see is the future of your kids, but somehow we lose sight of the fact that there is also a future for us that is almost as easy to miss. We miss it because it is harder to see. It is like you go out of the room to work, come back and then pretend you were never there. As kids we are living in the middle between time and we are figuring it out. We love our parents, we are confused by our parents and we often want to turn their clock backward, or turn their clock forward. We know that it is hard for them. If we watched their clock we would become that old. That would be scary. Sometimes we want to turn it back so that we do not turn back. We get a little bored of the past sometimes. We feel a little desperate for the future. As an adult we are in this place all the time, and it is exhausting. It is not easy to see the future. It is easier to look

You find yourself stuck. I would typically use one of these four approaches but they are wearing thin. They are now all ineffective. John Crestani over at has come to the rescue. Here you are gleaning secrets on how to turn any simple image into a fun but informative and interesting jigsaw puzzle to use in your business presentations or to just to amuse yourself. The example he shows here is a Mickey Mouse jigsaw puzzle picture but he uses the same strategy in his other examples. The example, of course, was sent to me by Mr. Crestani with the note in the bottom left hand corner saying "Adam". Yes, I know, that's not real text but this is my blog, I can say what I want. The original picture of course, is available upon request. If you are unsure of your audience's level of interest, you can always send the real text version or just send the picture that you want to use and see how it looks. Find specific files on your mobile deviceQ: Schedule task and run one after the other I am trying to run a code written in python on some conditions with a while loop. The code is run in background but I am finding difficulties scheduling it. What I am looking for is to run the code in background with say an interval of every 2 minutes for first 5 minutes. After that, the code should run every 5 minutes. If the code completes its task with a success then it should not run any more. If the task is failed then the code should run after 1 day. from random import * from datetime import * while True: r.randint(0, 1000000) from time import * # Start time now = time() now.strftime('%Y-%m-%d %H:%M:%S') start = now # End time end = now + timedelta(seconds=3600) # Duration of task duration = end - start duration_seconds = duration.total_seconds() duration_days = duration.days + duration.seconds/86400 # Hour h = duration_days/86400 # Minute m = duration_days % 86400 # Second s = duration_days % 86400 % 86400 # Log info info = "Done." print str(h) + ':' + str(m) + ':' + str(s) + " " + str(duration_days) + " " + str(duration_days.days) + " " + str(duration_days.seconds) + info A: maybe something like that can help you : import time import random while True: r.randint(0, 1000000) from time import * now = time() now.strftime('

If I have a query like this: select * from tbl where f0=1 and f1=3 What is the difference (if any) between this query and the following query: select * from tbl where f1=3 and f2=1 ? I know that the first query will use the 3d column index, and the second will use a 2d column index. I want to know if there is any difference in speed or any performance implications. A: If you can make the f0 and f1 columns an index, then the 2d will be faster. Try EX
