[Purification of human platelet-derived growth factor. I. A one-step purification procedure by affinity chromatography on columns of Sepharose-linked antibodies against platelet derived growth factor]. A simple procedure was developed for the separation of human platelet-derived growth factor (PDGF) from the crude platelet extract by affinity chromatography on immunosorbents consisting of Sepharose coupled with antibodies directed against PDGF. Initially PDGF was fractionated on affinity chromatographic columns using PDGF-immunoglobulin G coupled to Sepharose. Anti-PDGF antibodies were then used to elute PDGF from the immunosorbent. Compared with the classical method for purification of PDGF (more than 30% of the activity of the starting crude preparation), the newly developed procedure yielded a 10-fold higher yield (about 80%). The purity of the preparations was evaluated by SDS-polyacrylamide gel electrophoresis. The purified PDGF fractions were found to have a molecular weight of about 22,000 Dalton, indicating that the procedure did not produce any co-purification of a macromolecular compound.Previewing For Registration: All registration fees are due at the time of registration.
