it's still the same thing. What else can I do? jaavilar 03-17 09:40 AM If you think the word "good" can refer to anything good or bad, and if you give the word "bad" a completely opposite meaning, then you may have a personality disorder. I feel that there is a very large difference between what makes a product "good" or "bad". If it is a good quality product in an area that is not considered top, it may sell like hotcakes. We had a large surge in demand of Xactimate. However, if it were in a more expensive line, such as HP line printer, which was a tremendous amount of money, it would be considered a "bad" product, and would sell to a much lesser market. If you were to select any non-HP product at Office Depot (I know you are not an OD person, but just giving an example) and compare it to a HP equivalent, the HP one would be cheaper, but it would not sell. So in my mind, if a product is a good product, it means it sells, if it is a bad product, it means it does not sell. I am not saying that an HP printer is "good", because it is not. I am saying that if it is a top quality product, you can sell a lot of it. If you were to say, "this product is good" - it would be marketing buzzword, or not significant, or otherwise irrelevant. If you were airborne as long as they can (using gliding, parachutes, or powered aircraft) while trying to avoid being caught and landing on other groups (or being caught in general). Currently, these are popular in Europe and North America, Australia and New Zealand. Origin While the meaning of the word "scramble" had been established in early English language dictionaries, the origin of the word itself has been the subject of much dispute. Some suggest that it comes from the practice of the French nobility from 1620 to 1820 to compete at the Epee phaleristic where the winner would "stand on a table top ten feet above the guests. The loser would fall off a lower table, while screaming 'scramble'." The winner would be deemed "insolent" or "impudent," depending on how the loser reacted to the challenge (see also: Pere-Tais). Scramble competitions were common during the 19th century in the United States, especially in the upper classes. The races were held at such places as the Boston Society of Cincinnati, the University of Virginia, the U.S. Military Academy, the University of Maryland, the Maryland Agricultural College (now known as The College of Agriculture and Life Sciences), and the West University. New York City's Columbia University, which is renowned for athletics, also held a scramble, dubbing it the "Duel of the Epees." In Britain, the earliest known scramble was between the Duke of Portland's son and James, Duke of Sutherland, held on September 9, 1835, in the London region. The competition was so fierce that it had to be stopped after only five rounds.

Later, a rise in gambling brought about an increase in illegal "scheme" for "scrambling" and in 1844 a group of English nobles created the Association of Scramble Players, a "charitable institution" dedicated to "the encouragement of the sport of scrambling, by awarding a prize for flying farthest and highest." The Association grew into a group of several thousand, ranging from the nobility to the working classes. In 1885, Princess Victoria, Queen of the United Kingdom, visited the Association. She was pleased by the games and the crowd and named the sport "The Swallow and Nest (or Swallow-Nest)
