Riveting Traditions: The Sled Dog The Gjemta region of Norway has always been great for cross-country skiing. There are hundreds of kilometers of well-equipped, well-maintained trails, some close to civilization and others hundreds of kilometers in length. Gjemta is the classic destination for the Norwegian sled dog. To compete in the classic, one must have trained on an elk or a reindeer. In Gjemta, there are wide, open fields of snow on which the dogs can run at full speed in an endless, flat circle. One of the dogs, a hound named Flossie, catches a deer and carries it for the rest of the pack. There is a kind of competition to see who will carry the deer, though a dog needs to have no current wounds or other injuries to be eligible. Gjemta is the perfect place to learn the sport. The snow quality is excellent and the vast tracks mean there is always plenty of space to run. There is also a small training center for the dogs, situated very close to the best sledding fields. The best runs are at Lower Haldin, where, on every weekday, there are more than 50 dogs and their owners that take advantage of the tracks. The area has a rich history. The original pioneers and their dogs came here from the western coast more than a hundred years ago, and a huge number of people, after the First World War, established themselves here. In the 1940s, the Norwegians started to smuggle textiles into Russia through the border stations near Gjemta, and many Norwegians became highly successful in this profession. Another important aspect of the sport is the dogs' health. A really healthy dog has a bright and shiny coat. Not all dogs are suited to the sport. Those with dark coats, or those with skin problems that cause their skin
