Well, that is because our passion of writing for y'all took a back seat to building our new company, getting to know one another, and having fun with our new family. I'll admit, I'm a bit nostalgic when it comes to reminiscing about our past, and we often have fun reminiscing about this blog. But, come on now, that was fun while it lasted. Since the last blog post, we have been full time with our businesses for a little over a year now, and in that time, we have learned so much about ourselves and the process of doing business. Our strengths and weaknesses. Our personalities and styles. So much has changed and we have learned so much about how to make our business work for us. And now we're back to being part-time with another baby on the way. Yeah, I know. It's a crazy time

Various Windows OSÂ . .Q: CSS padding-top works in FF but not IE I am trying to create a general CSS to style all the blocks of the page in the same way. I could define the width using this: width: 800px; padding-top: 10px; margin: 0px auto; However, I also wanted to do something like this to increase the height for all the divs: height: 150px; padding: 0px 15px; Now, in FF this works fine, but in IE the padding applied to this block doesn't seem to work. I have tried giving the boxes other IDs but the behavior is the same. Any idea why this is happening? Thank you.

A: The second parameter of padding applies not to the element being passed, but to the padding surrounding the element. For most elements, padding is 0 by default, so setting it to 15px will do nothing to your element. You should use `box-sizing: border-box` to size the box including padding and border.
