Find Nemo online. In this film, Marlin, a clownfish-turned-pirate, set free a pod of baby seaÂ .Many consumer products contain oil-based lubricating oils. For example, gear lubricants often contain mineral or synthetic oils, or mixtures thereof. Some examples of oil-based lubricants are natural oils, synthetic oils and mixtures thereof. Natural oils refer to oils which are derived from vegetable or animal sources. Examples of natural oils include, without limitation, liquid triglyceride oils such as corn oil, soybean oil, cottonseed oil, peanut oil, lard oil, linseed oil, sunflower oil, safflower oil, castor oil, olive oil, algae oil, coconut oil, cod liver oil and fish oil. Synthetic oils refer to oils which are synthetic. Synthetic oils can be derived from petroleum sources or from other sources, such as, for example, alcohol. Examples of synthetic oils include, without limitation, petroleum based oils such as, for example, mineral oils, synthetic esters (e.g., polyol esters), polyalphaolefins and polyepoxides. Some consumer products contain chlorine-containing base oils. Examples of chlorine-containing base oils include, without limitation, chlorinated paraffin, chlorinated isoparaffin, and branched isoparaffin base oils. Some consumer products contain chlorine-containing additives. Examples of chlorine-containing additives include, without limitation, chlorinated silicone oils, polychlorinated paraffin, alkyl phthalates, and chlorinated polybutadiene. For consumer products containing chlorine-containing base oils, chlorine-containing additives or chlorine-containing base oils as described above, there are concerns relating to the presence of hydrogen chloride. The hydrogen chloride which is produced in the use of chlorine-containing base oils, chlorine-containing additives or chlorine-containing base oils may become mixed with the mixture of the consumer product and chlorine, and may subsequently be released into the environment. The United States Environmental Protection Agency regulates the amount of hydrogen chloride that may be released in the environment. EPA's proposed Hydrochloric Acid Emission Standards (HACHES) regulations are set forth in Volumes 38.4, 40 and 41 of the Federal Register [EPA—2006]. These regulations will create a maximum allowable hydrochloric acid emission level of 1.5
