The way I have resolved this is to declare the getters and setters as synchronized. This seems like a pretty dirty hack to me. Is there any way to make this behavior conditional without having to use a lock statement? Synchronized is not supported by Java 5 or 6 on Windows. A: Implement the getter and setter as syncronized if the class is multithreaded. If you don't have to support JDK 5, you can use the volatile keyword: volatile int count; public int getCount() { return count; } public void setCount(int n) { count = n; } A: You can make the getter synchronized, while you do not make the setter synchronized. If the set
