A few of the specific highlights regarding the report's findings are: In 2013, the total global capitalization of houses for homebuyers will increase by 7.2 percent to $1.6 trillion. The U.S. capitalization of houses for homebuyers will top $1 trillion in 2013. The Asia-Pacific region will be home to the majority of the world's new market capitalization of houses for homebuyers: China is expected to be the largest market in the Asia-Pacific region in terms of new house capitalization. India will be the second-largest and fastest-growing market. Europe will be the third-largest market, and is expected to overtake the United States to take first place in terms of homebuyers' disposable income in 2013. In 2013, 40 percent of the new market capitalization of houses for homebuyers will be in Europe. The U.S. and China will account for most of the demand in the region. Growth in Latin America will be modest in 2013. By 2022, the total market capitalization of houses for homebuyers will have increased by 11.8 percent to $2.0 trillion. India will be the third-largest and fastest-growing market. In 2020, demand in Asia Pacific is projected to exceed $3 trillion, while Europe will account for 40 percent of the total. The report also provides a forecast for capitalization of houses for homebuyers in Europe, the Americas, China, and India. Demand is expected to rise in Europe, China, and India, while it will decline in the U.S.

Ask HN: How do you use SecureDrop? - tobr For context, I'm a journalist with an organization that mostly targets the developing world. We're currently looking at reducing the amount of data we collect and the amount of data we expose. SecureDrop is an excellent tool and I hope that you all use it. I want to know how you use it. So, how do you use it? ===== webmaven From what I've read, the website () specifically recommends [0] "Use SecureDrop locally on the machine or on a USB stick. Use SecureDrop online if you don't want your metadata to remain in a single database file — it's better to keep metadata separate from data." [0] [credentials-against-a-specific-content-class-id) ----- egeozcan There is also a private IRC channel for journalists (second-to-last channel in #freenode) available. It makes it easier

Real-time motion analysis is rapidly becoming a powerful tool for studying biomechanical aspects of motor control and movement in man. In this report several issues pertaining to real-time motion analysis have been addressed. These include (1) the relative merits of the video and photodiode techniques, (2) the methods of gathering data as opposed to continuous measurements, and (3) the relationship between computer hardware and software, the nature of kinematics recorded by the computer system, and the distortion imposed by the human interface. Finally, several techniques for tracking and digitizing movement are described. Real-time motion analysis in man can be a valuable tool in many areas of study. Careful attention to the design of the system is critical in obtaining reliable data. The methods reported will allow a systematic approach to be taken in real-time motion analysis. // Copyright (c) 2019 Hugo Amiard hugo.amiard@laposte.net // This software is provided 'as-is' under the zlib License, see the LICENSE.txt file. // This notice and the license may not be removed or altered from any source distribution. #ifndef TWO_MESHES_CADTECHNICAL_ALLOW_TO_SMOOTH_H #define TWO_MESHES_CADTECHNICAL_ALLOW_TO_SMOOTH_H namespace two_mesh { struct AllowToSmooth { enum { enable, disable }; }; } #endif
