AutoCAD LT 1.0. AutoCAD was first released in December 1982 as a desktop app running on microcomputers with internal graphics controllers. Before AutoCAD was introduced, most commercial CAD programs ran on mainframe computers or minicomputers, with each CAD operator (user) working at a separate graphics terminal. AutoCAD is also available as mobile and web apps.Thanks to its basic design philosophy and its relatively easy to use interface, AutoCAD gained a large user base. Autodesk previously used a proprietary document format called Revit for its Revit architecture design software. Later they split the products and released Revit for free and Revit Architecture for commercial use. Common lisp programming language AutoCAD's AutoLISP is designed as a high-level scripting language. AutoLISP has two main forms: AutoLISP (for graphic commands and automation) and AutoLISP-GUI (for creating dialogs, command boxes, toolbars, etc.). From 1992 until about 1997, AutoLISP was an add-on programming language for AutoCAD developed by Marc Schlotfeld, Susan E. Funk, Jan Schneider, and Joan Demeuse. While a product for the largest of CAD applications, it also came with separate AutoLISP and AutoLISP-GUI libraries. Jobs were lost when the developer team of AutoLISP was laid off, and the remaining developers went to work on the development of ObjectARX. In 1997, AutoLISP was integrated into AutoCAD, and ObjectARX became the front end for AutoLISP and AutoLISP-GUI. General structure of AutoLISP AutoLISP's main code is in a library called AutoLISP (AutoCAD) which is itself located in the program directory and has subdirectories. The DLL extension is used for dynamically linked libraries (DLL's). AutoLISP creates multiple source files with the same name and with different extensions (i.e.,.acl,.lfn, etc.). These files contain a source code. The AutoLISP program runs with a special processor called LispMachine. The first line of code reads the "Lisp form" or instruction, and the processor executes this instruction. The next line of code reads a definition called "macro". The next line of code contains "macro code" that will be processed when the macro is invoked. The last line of code is not a Lisp form, but a property that is passed to the macro code. The code can be wrapped in "code snippets". In this case the code snippet (and its properties) is passed as an argument to the macro code. Syntax AutoLISP uses Common Lisp syntax, like most of AutoCAD. Automatic generation of operator syntax AutoLISP automatically generates ca3bfb1094
