"What is the nature of the tweet?" Trump said. "The tweet that was sent to me said 'The queen of England was hysterical and she must be respected.' What does respect have to do with it?" Many outside of England have cited disdain for the U.K.'s recently elected Conservative leader, Prime Minister Theresa May, and her failure to enact tough Brexit policies, which has left Parliament on the brink of a Brexit. "I think they should be allowed to have their own elected politicians in this country. Otherwise, we have tremendous problems," the president said. "There are many, many different groups, and many, many votes, and they get totally, totally -- I mean, you could call it rigged. And that's the word. That's what they are. They're rigged. And I think the people should have their own politicians." The comments were prompted by Trump tweeting on April 19, "The failing @nytimes did a long & boring story on the so-called 'Trump-Votes,' only to find that the states that voted for me in the election, and voted for Mrs. Clinton in the primary, were not listed as votes by the Times. Very unfair!" The president's criticisms were immediately met with ridicule on social media. "Trump probably thinks it's rigged that people on the whole planet can vote for Hillary, but what about the U.S.?[?] #rigged," one Twitter user wrote. Trump supporters and detractors quickly went to the president's defense. "He never came out and said he thought the system was rigged. He's an ignorant president, but he's not the only one," Andrew W. Kolodny, president of the Alliance Defending Freedom, told The Hill in an email on Tuesday. "He didn't say it because he doesn't think it is true. He doesn't think the system is rigged," added Kolodny, a retired professor of Law at U.C. Berkeley. "He tried to affect the election for Hillary. He's not a fan of the free press. He doesn't like it when people call him on his bad policy or bad ideas." On Wednesday, Trump addressed the issue at a roundtable discussion about criminal justice reform at the White House. "I don't think it's rigged," Trump said. "You look at some of the things that are happening, where we have completely open borders, people are coming from

Epitope-based selection of an anti-HIV-1 monoclonal antibody that targets the core of the virus. An antigen-binding fragment (Fab) from an HIV-1-neutralizing monoclonal antibody was covalently linked to a solid phase to select a complementary antigen-binding fragment (paratope) by means of an anti-Fab antibody (alpha anti-Fab). The latter was also linked to an agarose bead. In this setup the paratope selected the antigen by affinity and phage display. The antibody, alpha anti-HIV-1, was isolated by screening of a phage display antibody library using the recombinant p24 core antigen of HIV-1 as selection target. Alpha anti-HIV-1 Fab bound to the p24 core antigen and the Fab was cross-linked to protein A, thereby anchoring alpha anti-HIV-1 Fab onto the solid phase. Biotinylated alpha anti-HIV-1 Fab was captured on streptavidin beads from a polyclonal anti-HIV-1 serum and combined with phage displaying the HIV-1 core antigen. The phage-HIV-1 core was stained with an Ig-specific phage-antibody-conjugate and bound phages and unbound phages were panned. To isolate the paratope, the unbound phages were eluted by incubation of the beads with beta-galactosidase followed by mannose precipitation. Escherichia coli colonies were screened for HIV-1-specific binding by dot blotting and for neutralizing activity against the HIV-1 strain BaL, which was confirmed by an indirect pseudotype assay. Neutralizing activity was also demonstrated in an AID-deficient cell line, indicating that the paratope is a functional epitope on the HIV-1 core particle.A review of chemotherapy for advanced or recurrent carcinoma of the ovary: what is new? Medical management of ovarian cancer remains a challenge due to the limited survival advantages and unacceptable side effects. Standard therapy involves surgical debulking of the tumor followed by a combination of surgical cytoreduction and platinum-based chemotherapy. Despite platinum-based therapy, the majority of patients will eventually develop progressive disease, indicating an unmet need for new therapies. The therapeutic landscape for ovarian cancer has changed significantly in the past two decades. The introduction of cisplatin-based chemotherapy in the 1980s,
