Based on these facts, the Company maintained that Mr. Smith failed to state a claim under the PMPA and that the Arbitrator therefore did not have jurisdiction. The district court denied the Company’s motion, finding that the moving papers “presented a factual question as to whether the Arbitrator failed to act in conformity with the... PMPA.” We agree with this conclusion and also with the district court’s reasoning. Since Mr.

Smith presented a factual -4- question as to whether the Arbitrator failed to act in conformity with the PMPA, we hold that the district court properly exercised jurisdiction over the matter. In his brief on appeal, Mr. Smith asserts, for the first time, that this case should be remanded to the Arbitrator “with instructions that he reconsider his decision in light of the American Arbitration Act...,” thus suggesting that this case involves the question of whether a federal court or an arbitrator has jurisdiction over a dispute, or whether a federal court or an arbitrator is a gateway to the federal courts. Review of epidural fentanyl for labour. Epidural fentanyl is a new technique for relieving the pain of labour. A review of the literature from 1976 to 1990 suggests that the dose-response curve for epidural fentanyl is similar to that for intramuscular fentanyl. Epidural fentanyl is approximately 5 times more potent than intramuscular fentanyl. Various studies suggest that epidural fentanyl provides a 70% to 90% reduction in epidural analgesia requirement for labour in comparison with parenteral opioids. Studies of epidural fentanyl for labour analgesia did not report the incidence of neonatal outcomes. If the appropriate precautions are taken to avoid intrathecal fentanyl, the risk of neonatal outcomes is similar to that associated with traditional labour analgesia. Epidural fentanyl is associated with low rates of major obstetric and neonatal complications and a relatively high satisfaction rate. The concentration of opioid in epidural solutions is highly variable, requiring constant vigilance and dose titration to ensure an adequate level of analgesia. Epidural fentanyl is a new technique for labour analgesia, and the main disadvantage at present is the requirement of special training to administer this technique.[Chromosome aberrations induced in human peripheral lymphocytes by toluidine blue solutions]. Toluidine blue, a commonly used dye in histology laboratories, was evaluated as a clastogen and mutagen on human peripheral lymphocytes in vitro. Nuclear divisions were studied in cultures treated with the dye at three different concentrations during a 24-hr period, as well as in untreated cultures. Chromosome aberrations were scored in the cytokinesis-blocked metaphases. No statistically significant increases in chromosome aberrations were observed in cultures treated with toluidine blue. These data indicate that toluidine blue is a non-genotoxic compound.Present: There are few things more disappointing than reading an article or editorial that makes a simple factual mistake – such as when a media outlet relies on a private citizen, an anonymous source, or a single source with a faulty memory for the bulk
