MEXICO CITY (Reuters) - The Pemex oil company is seeking bids to harvest a 500,000 barrel-per-day (bpd) oil field in Mexico for the first time, as it seeks to raise more cash to cover slumping production from U.S. shale. An oil well is seen in the Eagle Ford Shale oil field near La Vernia, Texas

The company has eight non-operated oil fields in the Permian Basin in West Texas and New Mexico, but the majority of its income comes from its core oil operations, mostly in Mexico, and it is seeking to raise a total of $1.8 billion. Pemex estimates that it has large reservoirs in potential fields that have a proved undeveloped capacity of 2.35 million barrels per day, according to a copy of a request for information (RFI) reviewed by Reuters. Pemex's RD$9.5 billion ($400.6 million) request for information is the largest of several auctions being held by its replacement of Chief Executive Emilio Lozoya, who has run the state-owned company since 2011. Lozoya also seeks a large raise for his remaining five-year term which ends in 2022. His compensation is expected to be north of $5 million, according to sources familiar with the new Pemex board. Pemex's CEO is president of the company. Pemex's expansion plan is linked to talks with U.S. shale companies to import oil from fields that have been developed with technologies not yet used in Mexico. The company is seeking to identify oil field operators from around the world to collaborate with on the project. Pemex has a market capitalization of $11.3 billion and has twice exceeded the $8 billion market capitalization it has in its present form. The boost to revenue and its market capitalization should be enough to boost confidence in its cash, analysts said. "Pemex has a market capitalization of

More Ice Cream that the Kids will Eat Do you have kids who don't eat much? They're fussy eaters? Who are picky eaters? Who don't like vegetables? These are common signs that you could have a slower, less active child on your hands. Whether your fussy eater is 3 or 13, there's a fix-it for them. They're sick of being miserable and complaining and just want to be happy for one blissful fleeting moment when they get real food in their bellies. At end of the day though, their mood usually returns to neutral and they're back to complaining about being sad or uncomfortably hungry. Here's The Truth About Your Fussy Eater: Here's The Truth About Your Fussy Eater: Cookies are bad. Lots of our readers are actually members of Team Cookies. On the other hand, Eggs are awesome and wonderfully filling and nutritious. Eggs also emit a delicious smell that is magnetic to babies and small children, especially at the beginning of the day or on a vacation when there is no chance to go grocery shopping. Your child actually does not care about whether it's eggs or cookie dough as long as there is some form of delicious foods in their bellies. How Do I Get My Kids to Eat More? Cook with them Cook with them is best because you can control the sense of obligation to both your child and the meal. You can even come up with creative names or play little games to get them to eat foods they don't like. Or they have someone else have them eat their veggies. It's harder to resist a mouth watering, delicious looking cookie than it is to resist, say, an apple, even when Mom and Dad are both urging you to eat the apple. If your kid's food tastes bad, hold the food in your hand and put it in your mouth while your kid is hungry and staring in judgment. Serve smaller portions

KINSHASA, Congo (AP) - Angola's President Jose Eduardo dos Santos said on Sunday it was "hopeless" to talk about peace in the region of the South African port of Richards Bay as long as "Angola is not free and so African problems are not solved." Dos Santos, who had been on his first trip to Congo since the 1991-2002 civil war ended, also said, "Ultimately in the history of Angola, we can't be separated from the existence of the Congo." He was visiting the port, next to the Congo-Brazzaville border, for talks with Congo's outgoing president, Denis Sassou Nguesso, and meet with other African leaders. He spoke during the opening of a summit of the central African Forum for Integrated Agricultural Development, an effort to promote agricultural development in the region of Congo, Angola, Central African Republic and Chad. Angola became independent from Portugal in 1975. Congo gained independence in 1960. They fought a civil war from 1980 to 1991 that killed some

2.5 million people. Dos Santos said his country was the “prominent economic, political and social actor” in the region. He said, “The speeches of some North African and Arabic countries about the dark side of Africa, Angolan peace and African independence, to me are words of hopelessness as long as Angola is not free and so African problems are not solved.” As for peace in the Congo, he said the situation was “clear;” that it needs to “at first be a return to a just peace, a just status and a just security.” “There has always been talk of peace and
