What's new:

Video Review A couple years ago we did a Redline Tank Review and had a lot of fun with the new Berserker system and the FSA Court Cross. We were very impressed with the overall quality of the new system and how it added tons of versatility to the tank. This time around we are looking at the TAE KOALA Tiger Tank 59 which is very much the evolution of that system. The Tiger Tank is very well built, corners are relatively tight, and the build quality is an improvement over the Berserker. This tank is much easier to mount and use these days although that's due to the changes in the FSSAktron mount system. It took me longer than I wanted to figure out how to mount the kit though. The Tiger also has more height (thanks @Bomber Martin) and it is much easier to see your target in day light. It is also possible to see your own silhouette! I feel the stubbier front bar furthers that. There are two different turrets to choose from and it allows for a much wider range of options than the Berserker. The Trinity system and the Barrel Spinner system each offer a different look and feel. I much prefer the spinner since the trinity system can not use mirrors. The Trinity comes as a hit/miss option since it uses a PDF but does give you some flexibility. The 60mm gun is one of the biggest plus points that the Tiger has going for it, it has a huge amount of firepower. The 60 is almost as big as the 90 of the Rizzo (AKA Scott Lynch Tracer) and they have the same reach. The muzzle velocity on the 60 is over 1240 feet per second. The tank has a 700g armor cap so only the basic kit is recommended. It has room for a motor to mount on top and if you have it mounted on top you can even have a vent on the other side for more electrical options as well. There are currently no known plans to mount any kind of aiming device. Please read the Kit & Parts List Page for the needed parts. Build quality is absolutely top notch, TAE KOALA has yet to disappoint and for me this tank is just getting better and better. I'm really loving the wide front bar and the low angle view. By using the TAE KOALA Leopard Sight Mount I believe that I was able to achieve some of the best viewing angles in a tank on my own. You
