Ray Bradbury Dies Aged 91 The author of Fahrenheit 451, the Martian Chronicles and the classic novel The Illustrated Man is dead at the age of 91. Bradbury died in his sleep yesterday (1 May) at his home in Los Angeles. He had been suffering from pneumonia and had spent the weekend at the hospital, but had recovered sufficiently to return home. He had lived in the US since 1948 and became a naturalised citizen in 1965. His death leaves William F Bowron as the last of the major living American sci-fi writers. He wrote the classic horror novel Fahrenheit 451 about a dystopian future where firemen burn books rather than let them be read. The work was also adapted for a film by Francois Truffaut and the French word for fireman is literally translated as "Book-Burner". His most famous works include The Martian Chronicles, The Illustrated Man and The Halloween Tree. He was an influential figure in the American genre of literature and his story, The Martian Chronicles, inspired such films as Apollo 13. Bowron said: "We are very sad to report that Ray Bradbury has died. I was privileged to know Ray and he was a great friend. I know he will be missed and the loss is great. "If Ray had not come along, I do not know if there would be anyone left in this genre. He set a high and wonderful standard. You can not help but think of the writers you have read and it will be his influence. "He set the bar high. I hope he will be remembered for that and not just for the books. He taught me the importance of the written word. "Our hearts go out to his family." Bradbury dedicated his collection of stories, The Martian Chronicles to Bowron. Bradbury's last book, Zen in the Art of Writing, was published in 2012. It was his autobiography. He won the Aeon Award for lifetime achievement in science fiction in 2004.
