Flexor tendon repair is the surgical first choice for the treatment of peripheral finger flexor tendon injuries. Manual or automated flexor tendon repairs using Fiber-Loop (FL) or Kessler stitch techniques have been widely used. However, the biomechanical properties of these two techniques after repair of fresh flexor tendons have not been reported to the best of our knowledge. In this study, using an Instron apparatus, the biomechanical properties of the immediate post-traumatic stability after flexor tendon repair were investigated. The results showed that FL in combination with the Kessler stitch technique did not significantly decrease the post-traumatic stability compared to the Kessler stitch alone. In particular, the post-traumatic stability of FL repaired tendons was comparable to the Kessler stitch repair and superior to the simple Kessler stitch repair. This study suggested that the FL technique was suitable for the repair of fresh flexor tendons.Q: How to split a multipart text file I am going through a.txt file, composed of multiple parts, using the following: import re print(textfile) parts = re.split(r'\s+', textfile) for part in parts
