In addition, LVEF at rest was previously correlated with desmoplasmin, laminin and fibronectin expression and extracellular matrix collagen synthesis in rat LV myocardium [bib12]. Although LV collagen can help maintain LV systolic function, cardiac fibrosis is an important factor in the generation of heart failure, regardless of its magnitude [bib8]. However, it is not yet clear if cardiac fibrosis is a compensatory mechanism or a progressive disease. CV and LV parameters in patients with primary biliary cirrhosis [rs0040] Primary biliary cirrhosis is an autoimmune disease that is characterized by progressive destruction of intrahepatic bile ducts and eventual fibrosis of the liver [bib15], [bib20], [bib21]. Biliary atresia is one of the most lethal forms of neonatal cholestasis with a survival rate of only 25% and 50% at 5 years after Kasai procedure [bib22], [bib23]. After Kasai procedure, liver insufficiency and heart dysfunction has been documented [bib22]. The report of patients with primary biliary cirrhosis showed that LV geometry was affected [bib3]. In our study, LA and LV dP/dt were significantly higher, and LVEF was decreased in primary biliary cirrhosis patients with heart failure. LA and LV dP/dt at each heart rate were significantly higher in the primary biliary cirrhosis patient group than in the control group (Table 1) [rs0005] (ref-type="table"). LA, LV mass and ventricular mass were higher, and the indexed LA and LV mass were
