Teacher' s Edition. com On this page you can read or download realidades 2Â .Numerous systems have been developed to detect the presence of a human being in an area. Different detection technologies and various structures are used. Motion sensing systems (e.g., infrared, motion detectors, microwave, etc.) are often installed in high traffic areas (e.g., train stations, airports, theaters, shopping malls, etc.) where they detect objects. In the daytime, these motion sensing systems are often triggered unintentionally by animals, such as stray dogs, cats, etc. or people walking by. In the nighttime, the system may be triggered unintentionally by a person in the area or may be activated because a motion sensing system is triggered by another motion sensing system. When detection by motion sensing systems is unintentional, users may rely on the presence of light to indicate the presence of another person.1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to an internal combustion engine, and more specifically, it relates to a spark ignition internal combustion engine which uses a fuel injected at a high pressure. 2. Description of the Prior Art The combustion of a fuel in a combustion chamber of an internal combustion engine is ordinarily effected by the complete combustion of fuel droplets released at the moment of ignition of the mixed charge in the combustion chamber. This type of combustion is referred to as the homogeneous combustion. In the homogeneous combustion, a large 0cc13bf012
