This DLC will add the character's voice to the game.A multisensory approach for spatial and temporal pattern recognition based on ultrasonic signals generated by working threads in a Z-direction movement. This study proposed an echo-ultrasonic-based approach for automatic recognition of weaving patterns (in both spatial and temporal domains) in real time based on the acoustic signals and a laser-scanned image of weavers. Traditional representations of the weaving pattern have been mainly based on two-dimensional symbols. The first problem for the evaluation of the weaving quality is the identification of defects in the weaving. Moreover, the manual weaving evaluation also requires high-level computer vision skills. On the other hand, the working thread in the weaving, which is called a carpet, is a three-dimensional object with a variety of configurations. The vibration of the working threads provides information for the recognition of the weaving patterns. The echo signal is time-variant and has been represented using a waveform plot in frequency domain. The time-localized frequency shift was applied in this study as the pattern feature. The time variant signal in a certain frequency band was integrated as a feature vector. The proposed spatial and temporal recognition system could also recognize weaving patterns in real time with the minimal processing time. The average processing speed was 4 ms/frame. The spatial and temporal recognition accuracy was 97.2% and 98.8%, respectively. Moreover, the performance of the system with robustness was tested with a few of standard pattern variations.This will get you started. When you have a new blog post to write, writing just the title and not the body will lead you to writing a post that sounds too pretentious. Instead, try these 5 ways to write the perfect blog title. 1. Start with an action verb Use an action verb in your blog title. It's easier to write and sounds more assertive than a generic word like "how." For example, "99 Ways to Make Bacon." 2. Use the right word The word "instantly" might work in an
