Mankind is dead. All but five souls survive. In a city hidden beneath the California Redwoods, primal instincts rule, and everything is used as a weapon. Our heroine, Hunt, is plunged into a survivalist fantasy full of vampires, werewolves, human knights, and a mystical idol who commands a cult of thousands. As she battles her way through the forest surrounding the city, she encounters reprogrammed police officers with guns that can destroy the environment, drugs and electricity-toting mercenaries with a thirst for blood, and a weathered cultist carrying a beautiful new idol in tow. Can she save the humans from extinction before the city itself is engulfed by this ancient forest? A game as haunting as it is addictive, Mary Skelter: Nightmares guarantees to stay with you long after the credits roll. The emotions of the failed participants of the experiment are shown in the animated interplay between the expressive faces of the characters. Each portrait, as a study of a character, has a different idea for the main mood of this experiment. There is a very important difference between people who have been through the experiment and the people who haven't. It's the difference between the people who were successful and those who were failed. The experiment was successful for some, and it was failed for others. In the case of the first group of participants, a failure is limited to a specific time, and they turn into successful people. The failed group is more like an undefined situation of unexpected tragedy. It's not a failure, but they will stay in this state forever. The setup for a voice comms experiment is the heart of the "Red Embrace: Hollywood" project, on which people can connect with each other. Each of us is a human person with his or her own unique personality, but we also share common traits. "Americans seem to have a new dictum," Mehdi Hassanshahi stated in remarks published in the latest online edition of Press TV, on April 30. "This is a result of the recent crisis that occurred in the U.S. government," he added. "America withdrew from the nuclear deal, and now it is clear that the American military commanders have a different approach toward Iran," Hassanshahi pointed out. "Now it is not the time to attack and harass the Islamic Republic," he concluded. Relations between Tehran and Washington have been fraught for some time. Recent attacks on oil tankers in the Gulf, including the downing of an American drone, have further intensified tensions, further souring ties between the two countries. On May 1, Press TV host Ahmad Shamkhani — the secretary of Iran's Expediency Council, the top internal security entity in the country — said that the atmosphere of tension with the United States is "new." Shamkhani noted that in the past, despite frequent threats, Iran has never seen the atmosphere that it is now experiencing. "We have never seen before such arrogant threats from the West," he emphasized. Iran and the United States held talks in Vienna on May 2 to salvage the nuclear deal.
