However, when I deploy my application, tomcat reverts to Servlet-api 2.5 and I am not able to use some annotations like @WebServlet. When I check my web.xml, there is no previous version of the servlet-api listed. There's only the declaration in web.xml. How do I prevent that from happening? Why is Tomcat reverting to this version if I don't explicitly add it to my web.xml? A: How do I prevent that from happening? Tomcat's default "runtime" is some variation on Tomcat 8.x.x. We can view this through the webapp/META-INF/MANIFEST.MF file. The value of J2EE_SPEC_VERSION_NAME is relevant here. Why is Tomcat reverting to this version if I don't explicitly add it to my web.xml? The build of Tomcat you're using does not contain the Servlet API 3.0 declaration. It therefore appears as though Tomcat is not using the 3.0 runtime, but rather a default runtime that used to be Servlet 2.5 in an earlier Tomcat version. This default is configured in web.xml. If you want Tomcat to provide 3.0, then you have to make that true. Q: Adding custom code inside iframe I have a widget called "mywidget" and here is the code: I am using
