Bandit's Lament is an action role-playing game for fans of old-school adventure games. Set in the medieval era, this game mixes the epic tales of heroic fantasy with physics-based action. The game system is based on classic adventure games, but the price of the game currently exceeds this. About the Add-On: Add-on content which was released separately. Our goal is to bring our players a complete package to satisfy all the fans of Bandit's Lament. Please, keep in mind the nature of the add-on. The content was designed with the newest version of our game in mind. It was developed by other programmers. What's new:

Chapter 1 - The Life Of A Black Sheep Xander "So that was that, right?" I dropped my hands and turned away. No need to look at his face; even if I'd wanted to, his whole body would've told me everything I needed to know. "And now what?" "Who knows?" Michael shrugged. "Bruised ego, probably." He shifted his feet and almost dropped his bag, but I hadn't expected him to pay attention to the technical elements of the set-up anymore; they were too much like physical reminders of the fact that Black went home and closed himself off. He really didn't want to talk, or maybe he just didn't know how. I was fairly certain it wasn't the first time he'd been hurt by a girl. "You did what you had to, didn't you? You did what you felt was best. From now on, it's out of your hands." "Huh?" Did my voice honestly ring with so much as a hint of surprise? "What are you talking about? I offered you the chance to get some closure!" His face lost its unnatural depth, and the muscles of his jaw softened, twisting in what should've been an expression of anger, but most likely just stared off to some place else. He pushed his glasses up with one hand, pushing his dark hair back and revealing for a moment the scars marking his eye. "Closure isn't the same thing as forgiveness, Xander." "Bullshit!" I didn't know whether I should laugh or cry. I realized I didn't have the nicest feeling towards this guy. This conversation sucked ass. "Everybody's got a black eye in their past, and you're not the first to try and outrun the pain there. I won't either, I promise." "What?" I took a step towards him, anger strong. "I'm not trying to escape my past, I'm trying to escape YOU!" He stepped back, letting his bag slide to the ground. This guy was either the biggest asshole on the planet or I'd misread the intent of his and Pippa's little spat. "I don't mean to be hard on you," he began. "I know that was bad. I know you really didn't mean it." "Excuse me?" I tilted my head, brow crumpling, while some muscle deep inside my chest tightened. What
