Q: How to check if javascript is enabled? I'd like to check if my browser supports javascript. I.E. if You are using IE8 and I've a JQuery plugin for IE6 and above, you automatically get the behaviour's of IE6 and above: $.fn.whatever = function(){ ... } But for IE8... no way... Does someone have an idea how to detect this? A: You can use jQuery's.noConflict() function to convert the jQuery namespace for the plugin function name away from the $ namespace: // window.jQuery would be undefined if (typeof jQuery!== "undefined") jq.noConflict(); Then you can just use jQuery, which will throw an error if IE8 doesn't support it (or current versions). if (! jq.support.noConflict) /* Determine IE version / jq.support.noConflict = function(){ / check IE version and fire a JS error */ } This is a function which gets the version of IE which a user's browser has and then launches an alert. Of course, as noted in the comments, if a website does also use JQuery in their code which they'd prefer to use instead of the native version, then you could run into issues. You could also get a false positive if the user has a browser which supports the relevant syntax and wants a certain plugin or behaviour but isn't running the latest version of the browser. A: Slightly more robust but less specific way of doing what is needed for cross-browser support: alert(jQuery.support.postMessage); Or: alert(jQuery.support.orientation); The answer to the question "Does Javascript support postMessage()?" will be "yes, and here is why.." A: First jQuery version can detect unsupported browser (only IE, Opera, Firefox,

What's new:

GeV Warsae is currently featuring a demo version for the PC and is in process of being optimized for consoles.

The demo consists of three short scenarios among which the following are available:

Haruna, an ancient enemy of the Elden Ring has awakened. As the Demon King, he may unite a mighty number of evil deities and dark beasts to be reborn in a new age of Chaos. We will need you!

The Mud Sea is a sunken, wondrous land blessed with the purest, swiftest magma and with the obstinate courage of the valiant. We will go to the lost edge of the Primordia to reach the Demon King.

The legendary Hollow, an ancient foe of the Elden Ring, has begun his return. Seek the Armor of the Hollow, escape into its underground paths! In order to reach the Armor of the Hollow, you will need to solve various puzzles. Don't fall into the trap!

Q: getting permissions on ftpd I'm hosting a fairly standard Apache/FTP server on an Ubuntu VM. I'd like to know if it was possible to give access to a certain file to a particular ip address. Could I do something similar to this? Allowanonymous ftp: YES A: As a starting point, this article on configuring an FTP server may serve you well. In particular, take a look at the paragraph starting on line 129 of /etc/vsftpd.conf. On Ubuntu/Debian, you would do something like: cd /etc wget to retrieve a template for configuring vsftpd. Next, on Ubuntu, sudo cp README.Debian /etc/vsftpd.conf It would be cool to automate this, perhaps through some kind of Ubuntu hosted software. After doing that, ftp into your Ubuntu/Debian machine with a valid username and password, and find the /etc/vsftpd.conf file. Open it up and search for your local IP address. You should add that IP address after each address match that you want logged in. For example: AllowDenyLocalIP ftp:YES AllowDenyLocalIPADDRESS1 ftp:YES Allow
