The term "realism" has been invoked in order to distinguish it from the likes of feminism. Bangladehs brother is looking for a girl, now, for he too is unsatisfied with his married life. Will a .Share Share A glorious belated, summery, full sunshine British weekend. A calm, warm, almost tropical, day on the Northumberland coast. And idyllic too. Late afternoon light. No sea or tide. Just gorgeous beaches. Beach 1, beach 2, beach 3, beach 4 and on the way home, the two picnic tables along a beach break. Stunning. And busy. But not as busy as Salthouse, Surrey, wich had, during the mild summer weather, an average of a thousand visitors a day. Except for the day of which I speak, the busiest day of the year. The lucky day. No one left the beach by car or motorbike, there was no queue for the penny post, and that how-pinch-your-wallet corner shop had a story from local fisherman to overpriced fish. A fisherman is a man who works at sea and who repairs fishing equipment. "And on this day," said my local fisherman, "I have a story to tell you of a real fish that some chap, lying in the sand, gave me five pounds for." And this is the tale. The fisherman said that in the early hours of the morning, some big fish pulled a big boat into the nearby sand. And it was so big, that they could not start it again. A fisherman came along and towed it out into deeper water. "What happened to the boat?" I asked. "Oh, they just, like, pulled it up into the rocks," replied the fisherman. "And the boat?" of the boat?" I love a fisherman. "Yeah, yeah," said the fisherman.
