The days of calling a game just 'The League' and 'The Ashes' are over. We're going to be seeing the name 'Big Guns', 'Big Guns, Big Guns' etc, thrown about more and more with the games being marketed by the International Cricket Council. The marketing of the sport has become very international, with a lot of TV sponsors taking a very much global and international approach to the sport. They don't want to see that for cricket to be a success they need to get a bigger slice of the pie, that means marketing the sport not just in the countries that are currently the big cricketing nations, but to the rest of the world as well. So 'Big Guns' becomes the name of the game, with the likes of Brian Lara, Sachin Tendulkar and Shane Warne calling the shots for their teams, with the likes of Lara and Tendulkar always leading the way. But while Lara and Tendulkar have been in the game for a long time and are great athletes, Warne is more on the rise and is proving to be a powerhouse for his team, he's won the ICC Player of the Year award four times in the last five years. The aim of this article is to see if the term 'Big Guns' will mean anything to the public. For the most part I'm going to be using it to refer to the captains of the teams, I'm going to say something like: 'England's World Cup winning captain, Andrew Flintoff and Australia's Big Guns, Shane Warne are in a battle to see which of the two will take the ball to Pakistan and South Africa' Andrew Flintoff af5dca3d97
