Tinnitus is frequently noted in geriatric patients and is a source of distress. We reviewed the records of 306 consecutive patients admitted to a retirement community over a 1-year period who required admission for chronic conditions, including tinnitus. The characteristics of the tinnitus were identified, and related comorbidities were evaluated. Tinnitus occurred in 65 (21%) of the 306 patients. Of the 156 men and 150 women, 97 men and 91 women were found to have tinnitus. Age was associated with the occurrence of tinnitus, with 85% of the tinnitus patients over the age of 60 years. Of the 4 patients with bilateral tinnitus, 3 had associated sensorineural hearing loss. In the remaining 56 patients with unilateral tinnitus, no etiologic cause was identified. The majority of patients with unilateral tinnitus had a hearing impairment. Of the patients with unilateral tinnitus, 30% were using ototoxic medications. Although tinnitus was noted in 21% of the elderly patients admitted to a retirement community, the majority of these patients had an identifiable cause. Ototoxic medications were not necessarily a cause of tinnitus. The occurrence of tinnitus was associated with age and hearing loss. Antibiotic prescribing in primary care before and during the onset of the Spanish flu: A historical cohort study. The aim of the current study was to determine how antibiotic prescriptions were made before and during the appearance of the Spanish Flu. We analysed anonymised prescription data for 20.9 million patients. We built Cox proportional hazard models to assess the risk of antibiotic prescription during the two pre-epidemic phases (18 and 19 October to 19 November and 20 November to 7 December, 2018, respectively), and after the epidemic peak (15 to 29 June, 2019), compared with the period before the epidemic (0 to 18 October, 2018). Throughout the study period, primary care prescriptions of systemic antibiotics increased from about 32 to 50 million boxes/day in patients and from about 77 to 94 million boxes/day in primary care physicians 6d1f23a050
