More information can be found here. In a few weeks time I will be embarking on a road trip to (Old) Spain. I am studying in Palma for a year and I will be there for Christmas and Easter. In the lead-up to my trip I thought that I would get ahead of things and visit some of the cities on the way, and specifically Benicassim. As I have been up and down the Andalusian coast so many times I know the towns and beaches quite well. I am pleased to say that Benicassim has always been a little bit of a mystery. Upon reflection I realised I have actually never been in the town itself. It really is quite a pretty place and I was a little bit afraid of that and I wanted to make sure I was not committing the typical tourist mistake. Arriving in the town I could see how this would not be quite the typical tourist town experience. There were plenty of bars and restaurants along the main strip, but aside from that there were very few tourists and little in the way of gaudiness. The thing that immediately caught my attention when I arrived in the town was the sun. At this time of year the sun is still at its strongest and the heat is intense. Benicassim can get very muggy in the summer time so this is not ideal. However the town is set up for this and its a lot of fun to stroll down the main strip at night. In all honesty it is very hard to get a great night out in Benicassim as the heat has the same effect as the sun. So after a few days in the area I have to say, I liked it. The beachfront is really quite lovely and the town itself has a very lively and friendly feel about it. The downside to the town itself is that the bar area along the main beach is quite busy as the whole of the town is a bit of a party zone during the day. In short, the town itself has not done much for me (I know, I know, what was I expecting?), but I have been in plenty of places that have not done much for me either. However I think that if I was here in the summer (which I will be), it
