The enzyme causes the polymer to crosslink, and the crosslinking is reversible so that after a few weeks of storage the material will return to its gel-like state. Crosslinking is irreversible when the styrene is used as a monomeric material. X-ray diffraction patterns were collected on a Seifert. The peak intensities were used to determine the crystallinity using the Seifert proprietary software, and the ratio of crystallinity to amorphous was used as the indication of the degree of crosslinking. 4.12.. Mechanical properties {#s4l} --------------------------- The gels were placed in an oven to heat up to 300°C, and the diameter of the sample was measured with a micrometer. The test was repeated three times. 4.13.. Drug release study {#s4m} ------------------------- Poly(PEGDA) was used as the carrier because of its non-toxicity, low cost and ease of processing in comparison with many other synthetic polymers. Biodegradable polymers including poly(PEGDA), poly(lactic acid), poly(lactic-co-glycolic acid) and poly(e- 6d1f23a050
